

It is really a sad thing that one has to actually comment on a proposal that is so wrong in nature that it shouldn't have existed in a first place.

Isn't it strange that a regulation as this "supposed" to help prevent piracy will actually have far more reaching efect such as limiting the consumers freedom in the way they use technology?

CONTROL is the key word.

Pirating IP is already illegal - do you really need to make it more illegal by setting up a flag and making it illegal to break the protection. How much more illegal can it get? Obviously piracy is not the issue here.

I work in the IT field and it's really painful for me to watch how the freedom that led to the quick adoption of new technologies (computers and Internet included) is being slowly taken away from the people.

I urge FCC to reconsider and decline to pass this measure.

Thanks,

Emil

"All bad precedents begin with justifiable measures." - Julius Ceasar